of Okpebholo's four other song cycles — Unknown, Three Psalmic Meditations, Words Like Freedom, and Four Songs on Love — two of which feature saxophonist Julian Velasco, the winner of Cedille's inaugural Emerging Artist Competition in 2021.

Songs in Flight was conceived as an artistic response to Cornell University's Freedom on the Move database, an archive containing over 30,000 newspaper advertisements placed by North American enslavers to aid in the capture of runaway enslaved persons. According to Okpebholo, "The dehumanizing ads . . . described the runaways in chilling detail — their physical characteristics, clothing, mannerisms, even fragments of their stories which, ironically, offered a glimpse into these individuals' humanity." Taken collectively, the ads offer a detailed and rare source of information about the experiences of people who had no other way of entering the historical record.

The songs comprising Songs in Flight bring to life different figures found in these advertisements, incorporating varied styles including folk, elegiac lullaby, protest song, and spiritual. In her program note for the album, poet and lyricist Tsitsi Jaji writes, "The extraordinary singers on this album bare emotion in performances that display the human voice's capacity to bear the color and grain of interior worlds to contemporary audiences." Okpebholo sets the full brutal text of his chosen advertisements — as narrations, solos, or ensembles — so as not to sentimentalize the stories."

Songs in Flight connects past to present, drawing a line from the individuals who hoped to emancipate themselves for as long as they could, to the racial violence of today. Still, glimpses of hope are woven throughout. In its review of the cycle's premiere performance, The New York Times noted that it "zeroes in on... the simultaneous presence of good and evil, perseverance and depravity, combining beauty and harshness."

Complementing Songs in Flight are individual songs from Okpebholo's four other song cycles. With texts drawn from diverse sources — poets Langston Hughes and Marcus Amaker, Okpebholo's former teacher Beatrice Holz, and scripture — these songs build on the themes of Songs in Flight, ruminating on the moral and biological frailty of humankind.

Shawn E. Okpebholo was named the 2024 Chicagoan of the Year in Classical Music by the Chicago Tribune; his work has been described as "devastatingly beautiful" and "fresh and new and fearless" by The Washington Post. Songs in Flight continues his mission to create impactful, narrative-driven music, bringing new perspectives on historical stories. This is the first Cedille Records album to feature his music exclusively. Previous Okpebholo works were included on Will Liverman's 2021 album, Dreams of a New Day — Songs by Black Composers, a 2022 Grammy nominee for Best Classical Solo Vocal Album, and the Lincoln Trio's Trios from Contemporary Chicago (2022).
